Inside Out & Back Again

THANHHA LAI
Inside Out & Back Again
To the millions of refugees in the world, may you each find a home Part I Saigon

1975: Year of the Cat

Inside Out

Kim Hà

Papaya Tree

TìTì Waves Good-bye

Missing in Action

Mother’s Days

Eggs

Current News

Feel Smart

Two More Papayas

Unknown Father

TV News

Birthday

Birthday Wishes

A Day Downtown

Twisting Twisting

Closed Too Soon

Promises Bridge to the Sea Should We?
Sssshhhhhhh
Quiet Decision Early Monsoon
The President Resigns
Watch Over Us
Crisscrossed Packs Choice
Left Behind Wet and Crying
Sour Backs
One Mat Each
In the Dark
Saigon Is Gone

Part II
At Sea

Floating
S-l-o-w-l-y
Rations Routine
Once Knew
Brother Khôi’s Secret
Last Respects
One Engine
The Moon
A Kiss
Golden Fuzz Tent City Life in Waiting

Nước Mắm
Amethyst Ring
Choose Another Tent City
Alabama
Our Cowboy

Part III
Alabama

Unpack and Repack
English Above All
First Rule
American Chicken
Out the Too-High Window Second Rule
American Address Letter Home
Third Rule
Passing Time
Neigh Not Hee
Fourth Rule
The Outside
Sadder Laugh
Rainbow

Black and White and Yellow and Red

Loud Outside

Laugh Back

Quiet Inside

Fly Kick

Chin Nod

Feel Dumb

Wishes

Hiding

Neighbors

New Word a Day

More Is Not Better

HA LE LU DA

Can’t Help

Spelling Rules

Cowboy’s Gifts

Someone Knows

Most Relieved Day

Smart Again

Hair

The Busy One

War and Peace

Pancake Face

Mother’s Response

MiSSisss WaSShington’s Response

Cowboy’s Response
Today is Tết,
the first day
of the lunar calendar.

Every Tết
we eat sugary lotus seeds and glutinous rice cakes.
We wear all new clothes,
even underneath.

Mother warns how we act today
foretells the whole year.

Everyone must smile
no matter how we feel.

No one can sweep,
for why sweep away hope?
No one can splash water, for why splash away joy?

Today
we all gain one year in age, no matter the date we were born.
Tết, our New Year’s,
doubles as everyone’s birthday.
Now I am ten, learning to embroider circular stitches, to calculate fractions into percentages, to nurse my papaya tree to bear many fruits.

But last night I pouted when Mother insisted one of my brothers
must rise first this morning
to bless our house because only male feet can bring luck.

An old, angry knot expanded in my throat.

I decided to wake before dawn
and tap my big toe
to the tile floor
first.

Not even Mother, sleeping beside me, knew.
Every new year Mother visits the I Ching Teller of Fate.
This year he predicts
our lives will twist inside out.

Maybe soldiers will no longer patrol our neighborhood, maybe I can jump rope
after dark,
maybe the whistles
that tell Mother
to push us under the bed will stop screeching.

But I heard
on the playground
this year’s bánh chưng, eaten only during Tết,
will be smeared in blood.

The war is coming closer to home.

February 12
My name is Hà.

Brother Quang remembers
I was as red and fat as a baby hippopotamus when he first saw me, inspiring the name
Hà Mã, River Horse.

Brother Vũ screams, Hà Ya, and makes me jump
every time
he breaks wood or bricks in imitation of Bruce Lee.

Brother Khôi calls me Mother’s Tail
because I’m always three steps from her.

I can’t make my brothers
go live elsewhere, but I can hide their sandals.

We each have but one pair, much needed during this dry season when the earth stings.
Mother tells me
to ignore my brothers.
We named you Kim Hà,
after the Golden (Kim) River (Hà), where Father and I once strolled in the evenings.

My parents had no idea what three older brothers can do to the simple name Hà.

Mother tells me,
They tease you because they adore you.

She’s wrong,
but I still love
being near her, even more than I love my papaya tree.

I will offer her
its first fruit.

Every day
Papaya Tree

It grew from a seed
I flicked into the back garden.

A seed like a fish eye, slippery shiny black.

The tree has grown twice as tall
as I stand on tippy toes.

Brother Khôi spotted the first white blossom.
Four years older,
he can see higher.

Brother Vũ later found a baby papaya
the size of a fist clinging to the trunk.

At eighteen,
he can see that much higher.
Brother Quang is oldest, twenty-one and studying engineering.
Who knows what he will notice before me?

I vow to rise first every morning to stare at the dew on the green fruit
shaped like a lightbulb.

I will be the first to witness its ripening.

Mid-February
My best friend TiTi
is crying hard,
snotting the hem
of her pink fluffy blouse.

Her two brothers
also are sniffling
inside their car packed to the roof with suitcases.

TiTi shoves into my hand a tin of flower seeds we gathered last fall.
We hoped to plant them together.

She waves from the back window of their rabbit-shaped car.
Her tears mix with long strands of hair, long hair I wish I had.

I would still be standing there crying and waving to nothing if Brother Khôi hadn’t come to take my hand.

They’re heading to Văn Lâu, he says, where the rich go to flee Vietnam on cruise ships.

I’m glad we’ve become poor so we can stay.

Early March Father left home on a navy mission
on this day
nine years ago when I was almost one.

He was captured on Route 1
an hour south of the city by moped.

That’s all we know.

This day
Mother prepares an altar to chant for his return, offering fruit,
incense,
tuberoses,
and glutinous rice.

She displays his portrait taken during Têt
the year he disappeared.

How peaceful he looks,
smiling,
peacock tails
at the corners of his eyes.
Each of us bows
and wishes and hopes and prays.

Everything on the altar remains for the day except the portrait.
Mother locks it away
as soon as her chant ends.

She cannot bear to look into Father’s forever-young eyes.

March 10
On weekdays
Mother’s a secretary
in a navy office,
trusted to count out salaries in cash
at the end of each month.

At night
she stays up late designing and cutting baby clothes
to give to seamstresses.

A few years ago
she made enough money to consider buying a car.

On weekends
she takes me to market stalls, dropping off the clothes and trying to collect on last week’s goods.

Hardly anyone buys anymore,
she says.
People can barely afford food.

Still,
she continues to try.
Brother Khôi is mad at Mother for taking his hen’s eggs.

The hen gives one egg every day and a half.

We take turns eating them.

Brother Khôi refuses to eat his, putting each under a lamp in hopes of a chick.

I should side with my most tolerable brother, but I love a soft yolk to dip bread.

Mother says if the price of eggs were not the price of rice, and the price of rice were not the price of gasoline, and the price of gasoline were not the price of gold, then of course
Brother Khôi
could continue hatching eggs.

She’s sorry.

March 17
Every Friday
in Miss Xinh’s class we talk about current news.

But when we keep talking about how close the Communists have gotten to Saigon, how much prices have gone up since American soldiers left, how many distant bombs
were heard the previous night, Miss Xinh finally says no more.

From now on Fridays
will be for happy news.

No one has anything to say.

March 21
This year
I have afternoon classes, plus Saturdays.
We attend in shifts
so everyone can fit into school.

Mornings free, Mother trusts me
to shop at the open market.

Last September
she would give me
fifty dông
to buy one hundred grams of pork, a bushel of water spinach, five cubes of tofu.

But I told no one
I was buying
ninety-nine grams of pork, seven-eighths of a bushel of spinach, four and three-quarter cubes of tofu.
Merchants frowned at Mother’s strange instructions.

The money saved bought a pouch of toasted coconut, one sugary fried dough,
two crunchy mung bean cookies.
Now it takes two hundred đồng to buy the same things.

I still buy less pork,
allowing myself just the fried dough.

No one knows
and I feel smart.

Late March
Two More Papayas

I see them first.

Two green thumbs
that will grow into orange-yellow delights smelling of summer.

Middle sweet
between a mango and a pear.

Soft as a yam gliding down after three easy,
thrilling chews.

April 5
I don’t know any more about Father than the small things Mother lets slip.

He loved stewed eels,
paté chaud pastries,
and of course his children, so much that he grew teary watching us sleep.

He hated the afternoon sun,
the color brown,
and cold rice.

Brother Quang remembers Father often said
tuyệt sút,
the Vietnamese way to pronounce the French phrase tout de suite meaning right away.

Mother would laugh

when Father followed her around the kitchen repeating,
I’m starved for stewed eel, Sometimes I whisper
	tuyệt sút to myself to pretend
I know him.

I would never say tuyệt sút in front of Mother.
None of us would want to make her sadder than she already is.

Every day
Brother Quang races home from class, throws down his bicycle, exhausted, no longer able to afford gasoline for his moped.

Unbelievable, he screams, and turns on the TV.

A pilot for South Vietnam bombed the presidential palace downtown that afternoon. Afterward the pilot flew north and received a medal.

The news says the pilot has been a spy for the Communists for years.

The Communists captured Father, so why would any pilot choose their side?
Brother Quang says,
One cannot justify war unless each side flaunts its own blind conviction.

Since starting college, he shows off even more with tangled words.

I start to say so,
but Mother pats my hand,
her signal for me to calm down.

April 8
Birthday

I, the youngest,
get to celebrate
my actual birthday
even though I turned a year older
like everyone else at Têt.

I, the only daughter,
usually get roasted chicken,
dried bamboo soup,
and all-I-can-eat pudding.

This year,
Mother manages only banana tapioca and my favorite
black sesame candy.

She makes up for it
by allowing one wish.

I dye my mouth sugary black and insist on stories.
It’s not easy to persuade Mother
to tell of her girlhood in the North,
where her grandmother’s land stretched farther than doves could fly,
where looking pretty and writing poetry were her only duties.

She was promised to Father at five.
They married at sixteen, earlier than expected.
Everyone’s future changed upon learning the name Hồ Chí Minh.

Change meant
land was taken away,
houses now belonged to the state, servants gained power
as fighters.

The country divided in half.

Mother and Father came south, convinced it would be easier to breathe away from Communism.

Her father was to follow,
but he was waiting for his son, who was waiting for his wife, who was waiting to deliver a child in its last week in her belly.

The same week,
North and South
closed their doors.
No more migration.
No more letters.
No more family.

At this point,
Mother closes her eyes,

eyes that resemble no one else’s, sunken and deep like Westerners’ yet almond-shaped like ours.
I always wish for her eyes, but Mother says no.
Eyes like hers can’t help but carry sadness;
even as a child
her parents were alarmed by the weight in her eyes.

I want to hear more,
but nothing,
not even my pouts,
can make Mother open her eyes and tell more.

April 10
Birthday Wishes

Wishes I keep to myself:

Wish I could do what boys do and let the sun darken my skin, and scars grid my knees.

Wish I could let my hair grow, but Mother says the shorter the better to beat Saigon’s heat and lice.

Wish I could lose my chubby cheeks.

Wish I could stay calm no matter what my brothers say.

Wish Mother would stop
chiding me to stay calm, which makes it worse.

Wish I had a sister to jump rope with and sew doll clothes and hug for warmth in the middle of the night.

Wish Father would come home so I can stop daydreaming that he will appear in my classroom
in a white navy uniform and extend his hand toward me for all my classmates to see.

Mostly I wish Father would appear in our doorway and make Mother’s lips curl upward, lifting them from a permanent frown
of worries.

April 10
Night
A Day Downtown

Every spring
President Thiệu
holds a long long long ceremony to comfort
war wives.

Mother and I go because after President Thiệu’s talk talk talk—
of winning the war,
of democracy,
of our fathers’ bravery—each family gets five kilos of sugar,
ten kilos of rice,
and a small jug of vegetable oil.

Inside the cyclo
Mother crosses her legs so I can fit beside her.
The breeze still cool,
we bounce across the bridge shaped like a crescent moon where I’m not to go by myself.

Mother smells of lavender and warmth;
she’s so beautiful
even if
her cheeks are too hollow, her mouth too dark with worries.
Despite warnings,
I still want her sunken eyes.

Before I see it,
I hear downtown,
thick with beeps,
shouts, police whistles.
Everywhere,
mopeds and bicycles
race down the wide road, moving out of the way only when a truck
honks and mows straight down the middle of the lane.

We get out
in front of an open market.
We push our way to a bánh cuốn stand.
I love watching

the spread of rice flour on cloth, stretched over a steaming pot.
Like magic a crepe forms to be filled with shrimp and eaten with cucumber and bean sprouts.

It tastes even better than it looks.
While my mouth is full,
the noises of the market silence themselves,
letting me and my bánh cuốn float.

We squeeze ourselves
out of the market,
toward the presidential palace.

We stand in line;
for even longer
we sit on hot metal benches facing the podium.

My white cotton hat and Mother’s flowery umbrella are nothing against the afternoon sun, shooting rays into my short short hair.

I’m dizzy and thirsty;
the fish sauce
in the bánh cuộn
was very salty.

Mother gives me a tamarind candy.
I have never been so thrilled to drink my saliva.

Finally President Thiệu appears, tan and sweaty.
We know you have suffered.
I thank you,
your country thanks you.

Then he cries actual tears, unwiped, facing the cameras.
Mother clicks her tongue:

Tears of an ugly fish.

I know that to mean fake tears of a crocodile.

April 12
Twisting Twisting

Mother measures rice grains
left in the bin.
Not enough to last till payday
at the end of the month.

Her brows twist like laundry
being wrung dry.

Yam and manioc
taste lovely
blended with rice,
she says, and smiles,
as if I don’t know how the poor
fill their children’s bellies.

April 13
A siren screams over Miss Xinh’s voice in the middle of a lesson on smiley and bald President Ford.

We all know it’s bad news.

School’s now closed;
everyone must go home
a month too soon.

I’m mad and pinch the girl who shares my desk.
Tram is half my size,
so skinny and nervous.

Our mothers are friends.
She will tell on me.
She always tells on me.

Mother will again
scold me to be gentle.

I need time
to finish this riddle:
A man usually rides his bike 9 kilometers per hour, yet the wind slows him
to 6.76 kilometers for 26 minutes and 5.55 kilometers for 10;
how long until he gets home 11.54 kilometers away?

The first to solve it gets the sweet potato plant sprouting at the window.
I want to plant it
beside my papaya tree, where vines can climb
and shade ripening fruit.

Again I pinch Tram, knowing the plant
will be awarded
today
to the teacher’s pet,

who is always skinny and nervous and never me.

April 14
Five papayas
the sizes of my head,
a knee,
two elbows,
and a thumb
cling to the trunk.

Still green
but promising.

April 15
Uncle Son,
Father’s best friend,
visits us.

He’s short, dark, and smiley, not tall, thin, and serious like Father in photographs.
Still, when classmates
ask about my father, sometimes short and smiley come to mind before I can stop it.

Uncle Son goes straight to the kitchen,
where the back door opens into an alley.
Unbelievable luck!
This door bypasses the navy checkpoint and leads straight to the port.

I will not risk fleeing with my children on a rickety boat.

Would a navy ship
meet your approval?

As if the navy
would abandon its country?
There won’t be a South Vietnam left to abandon.

You really believe
we can leave?

When the time comes,
this house
is our bridge to the sea.

April 16
Mother calls a family meeting.

Ông Xuân has sold leaves of gold
to buy twelve airplane tickets.

Bà Nam has a van ready to load twenty-five relatives toward the coast.

Mother asks us,
Should we leave our home?

Brother Quang says,
How can we scramble away like rats,
without honor, without dignity, when everyone must help rebuild the country?

Brother Khôi says,
What if Father comes home and finds his family gone?

Brother Vũ says,
Yes, we must go.
Everyone knows he dreams of touching the same ground where Bruce Lee walked.

Mother twists her brows.
I’ve lived in the North.
At first, not much will happen, then suddenly Quang
will be asked to leave college.
Hà will come home
chanting the slogans
of Hồ Chí Minh,
and Khôi will be rewarded for reporting to his teacher everything we say in the house.

Her brows twist
so much we hush.

April 17
Brother Khôi shakes me before dawn.

I follow him to the back garden. In his palm chirps a downy yellow fuzz, just hatched.

He presses his palm against my squeal.

No matter what Mother decides, we are not to leave. I must protect my chick and you your papayas.

He holds out his pinky and stares stares stares until I extend mine and we hook.

April 18
Dinnertime
I help Mother
peel sweet potatoes
to stretch the rice.

I start to chop off a potato’s end as wide as a thumbnail, then decide to slice off
only a sliver.

I am proud of my ability to save until I see tears in Mother’s deep eyes.

You deserve to grow up where you don’t worry about saving half a bite of sweet potato.

April 19
We pretend
the monsoon has come early.

In the distance bombs
explode like thunder, slashes
lighten the sky,
gunfire
falls like rain.

Distant
yet within ears,
within eyes.

Not that far away
after all.

April 20
On TV President Thiệu
looks sad and yellow;
what has happened to his tan?

His eyes brim with tears;
this time they look real.
I can no longer be your president but I will never leave my people or our country.

Mother lifts one brow, what she does
when she thinks I’m lying.

April 21
Uncle Sơn returns and tells us
to be ready to leave any day.

Don’t tell anyone,
or all of Saigon
will storm the port.
Only navy families
can board the ships.

Uncle Sơn and Father graduated in the same navy class.
It was mere luck
that Uncle Sơn didn’t go on the mission where Father was captured.

Mother pulls me close and pats my head.
Father watches over us even if he’s not here.

Mother tells me
she and Father have a pact.

If war should separate them, they know to find each other through Father’s ancestral home in the North.
Crisscrossed Packs

Pedal, pedal Mother’s feet push the sewing machine.
The faster she pedals
the faster stitches appear on heavy brown cloth.

Two rectangles
make a pack.
A long strip makes a handle to be strapped across the wearer’s chest.

Hours later
the stitches appear
in slow motion, the needle a worm
laying tiny eggs
that sink into brown cloth.
The tired worm
reproduces much more slowly at the end of the day than at the beginning when Mother started the first of five bags.

Brother Khôi says too loudly, Make only three.
Mother goes to a high shelf,
bringing back Father’s portrait.

Come with us
or we’ll all stay.
Think, my son;
your action will determine our future.

Mother knows this son cannot stand to hurt anyone,
anything.

Look at Father.
Come with us so Father will be proud
you obeyed your mother while he’s not here.

I look at my toes,
feeling Brother Khôi’s eyes burn into my scalp.

I also feel him slowly nodding.

Who can go against a mother who has become gaunt like bark from raising four children alone?

April 26
Into each pack:
one pair of pants,
one pair of shorts,
three pairs of underwear,
two shirts,
sandals,
toothbrush and paste,
soap,
ten palms of rice grains,
three clumps of cooked rice, one choice.

I choose my doll,
one lent to a neighbor
who left it outside,
where mice bit
her left cheek
and right thumb.

I love her more for her scars.

I dress her in a red and white dress with matching hat and booties that Mother knitted.
Ten gold-rimmed glasses Father brought back from America where he trained before I was born.

Brother Quang’s
report cards,
each ranking him first in class,
begging in kindergarten.

Vines of bougainvillea fully in bloom,
burgundy and white
like the colors of our house.

Vines of jasmine in front of every window that remind Mother of the North.

A cowboy leather belt Brother Vű sewed
on Mother’s machine and broke her needle.

That was when he adored Johnny Cash
more than Bruce Lee.
A row of glass jars Brother Khôi used to raise fighting fish.

Two hooks and the hammock
where I nap.

Photographs:
every Têt at the zoo,
Father in his youth,
Mother in her youth,
baby pictures,
where you can’t tell whose bottom is exposed for all the world to see.

Mother chooses ten and burns the rest.

We cannot leave evidence of Father’s life that might hurt him.

April 27
Evening
Wet and Crying

My biggest papaya
is light yellow,
still flecked with green.

Brother Vũ wants to cut it down,
saying it’s better than letting the Communists have it.

Mother says yellow papaya tastes lovely dipped in chili salt.
*You children should eat *fresh fruit while you can.

Brother Vũ chops;
the head falls;
a silver blade slices.

Black seeds spill
like clusters of eyes,
wet and crying.

April 28
Sour Backs

At the port
we find out
there’s no such thing as a secret
among the Vietnamese.

Thousands found out about the navy ships
ready to abandon the navy.

Uncle Sơn flares elbows into wings, lunges forward
protecting his children.

But our family sticks together like wet pages.
I see nothing but backs sour and sweaty.

Brother Vũ steps up, placing Mother in front of him and lifting me
onto his shoulders.

His palms press
Brothers Quang and Khôi forward.
I promise myself to never again make fun of Bruce Lee.

April 29
Afternoon
We climb on and claim a space
of two straw mats
under the deck, 足够的 for us five
to lie side by side.

By sunset our space
is one straw mat,
enough for us five
to huddle together.

Bodies cram
every centimeter
below deck,
then every centimeter
on deck.

Everyone knows the ship
could sink, unable to hold the piles of bodies
that keep crawling on like raging ants
from a disrupted nest.

But no one is heartless enough
to say
stop because what if they had been stopped before their turn?
Uncle Sŏn visits and whispers to Mother.

We follow Mother who follows Uncle Sŏn who leads his family
up to the deck
and off the ship.

It has been said
the ship next door
has a better engine,
more water,
endless fuel,
countless salty eggs.

Uncle Sŏn lingers without getting on the new ship;
so do we.

Hordes pour
by us,
beyond us.

Above us
bombs pierce the sky.
Red and green flares
explode like fireworks.
All lights are off
so the port will not be a target.

In the dark
a nudge here
a nudge there and we end up
back on the first ship in the same spot with two mats.

Without lights
our ship glides out to sea, emptied of half its passengers.

April 29
Near midnight
I listen to the swish, swish
of Mother’s handheld fan, the whispers among adults,
the bombs in the ever greater distance.

The commander has ordered everyone below deck
even though he has chosen a safe river route
to connect to the sea,
avoiding the obvious escape path through Vũng Tàu,
where the Communists are dropping all the bombs they have left.

I hope TiTi got out.

Mother is sick with waves in her stomach even though the ship barely creeps along.

We hear a helicopter circling circling

near our ship.
People run and scream,
Communists!

Our ship dips low
as the crowd runs to the left, and then to the right.

This is not helping Mother.

I wish they would stand still and hush.

The commander is talking:
Do not be frightened!
It's a pilot for our side who has jumped into the water, letting his helicopter plunge in behind him.

The pilot appears below deck, wet and shaking.

He salutes the commander and shouts,

At noon today the Communists crashed their tanks
through the gates of the presidential palace and planted on the roof a flag with one huge star.

Then he adds
what no one wants to hear:
It’s over;
Saigon is gone.

April 30
Late afternoon
PART II
At Sea
Our ship creeps along the river route
without lights
without cooking
without bathrooms.

We are told
to sip water only when we must so our bodies
can stop needing.

Mine won’t listen.

Mother sighs.

I don’t blame her,
having a daughter
who’s either
dying of thirst
or demanding release.

Other girls must be made of bamboo,

bending whichever way they are told.
Mother tells Uncle Son
I need a bathroom.

We are allowed
into the commander’s cabin, where the bathroom is so white and clean,
so worth the embarrassment.
I nibble on the last clump of cooked rice
from my sack.

Hard and moldy,
yet chewy and sweet
inside.

I chew each grain
s-l-o-w-l-y.

I hear others chew
but have never seen anyone actually eating.

No one has offered to share
what I smell:
sardines, dried durian, salted eggs, toasted sesame.
I lean toward the family
on the next mat.

Mother firmly shakes her head.
She looks so sad
as she pats
my hand.
On the third day
we join the sea
toward Thailand.

The commander says
it’s safe enough
for his men to cook,
for us to go above deck, for all to smile a little.

He says there’s enough rice and water
for three weeks,
but rescue should happen much earlier.

_Do not worry,
ships from all countries are out looking for us._

Morning, noon, and night we each get one clump of rice,
small, medium, large,
according to our height,

plus one cup of water
no matter our size.
The first hot bite
of freshly cooked rice, plump and nutty,
makes me imagine the taste of ripe papaya although one has nothing to do with the other.

May 3 Mother cannot allow
dle children,
hers or anyone else’s.

After one week
on the ship
Brother Quang begins
English lessons.

I wish he would keep it to:
How are you?
This is a pen.
But when an adult is not there
he says,
We must consider the shame of abandoning our own country and begging toward the unknown where we will all begin again at the lowest level on the social scale.

It’s better in the afternoons with Brother Vũ, who just wants us
to do front kicks
and back kicks,
at times adding
one-two punches.
Brother Khôi gets to monitor lines for the bathrooms, where bottoms stick out to the sea behind blankets blowing in the wind.

When not in class I have to stay within sight of Mother, like a baby.

Mother gives me her writing pad. Write tiny, there’s but one pad.

Writing becomes boring, so I draw over my words.

Pouches of pan-fried shredded coconut Tamarind paste on banana leaf Steamed corn on the cob Rounds of fried dough Wedges of pineapple on a stick And of course cubes of papaya tender and shiny.

Mother smoothes back my hair, knowing the pain of a girl who loves snacks but is stranded on a ship.

May 7
Once Knew

Water, water, water everywhere
making me think
land is just something I once knew like

napping on a hammock

bathing without salt

watching Mother write

laughing for no reason

kicking up powdery dirt and

wearing clean nightclothes smelling of the sun.

May 12
Brother Khôi stinks; we can’t ignore it.

He stews and sweats in a jacket he won’t take off.

Forced to sponge-wipe twice a day, he wraps the jacket around his waist.

He keeps clutching something in the left pocket where the stench grows.

Neighbors complain, even the ones eight mats away, saying it’s bad enough being trapped in putrid, hot air made from fermented bodies and oily sweat, must everybody also endure something rotten?
Finally Brother Vũ holds Brother Khôi down and forces him
to open his hand.

A flattened chick
lies crooked,
neck dangling
off his palm.

The chick had not a chance after we shoved
for hours to board.

Brother Khôi screams, kicks everything off our mats.
Brother Quang
carries him above deck.

Quiet.

May 13
Last Respects

After two weeks at sea
the commander calls
all of us above deck
for a formal lowering of our yellow flag with three red stripes.

South Vietnam no longer exists.

One woman tries to throw herself overboard,
screaming that without a country she cannot live.
As they wrestle her down, a man stabs his heart with a toothbrush.

I don’t know them,
so their pain seems unreal next to Brother Khôi’s, whose eyes are as wild
as those of his broken chick.

I hold his hand:
Come with me.

He doesn’t resist.
Alone
at the back of the ship
I open Mother’s white handkerchief.
Inside lies my mouse-bitten doll, her arms wrapped around the limp fuzzy body of his chick.

I tie it all into a bundle.

Brother Khôi nods
and I smile, but I regret
not having my doll
as soon as the white bundle sinks into the sea.

May 14
In the middle of the night
our ship stops.

Mother hugs me,
hearts drumming
as one.

If the Communists
catch us fleeing,
it’s a million times worse than staying at home.

After many shouts
and much time
the ship moves forward with just one engine.

Mother would not release me.

The commander says,

Thailand is much farther on one engine.

It was risky to take the river route.

We escaped bombs
but missed the rescue ships.

The commander decides the ration is now
half a clump of rice
only at morning and night, and one cup of water
all day.

Sip,
he says,
and don't waste strength moving around because it's impossible to predict how much longer we will be floating.
The Moon

During the day
the deck belongs to men and children.

At nightfall
women make their way up.

In single files
they sponge-bathe
and relieve themselves behind blanket curtains.

I always stand in line with Mother.

Every night
she points upward.
At least
the moon remains unchanged.

Your father could be looking at the same round moon.
He may already understand

we will wait for him across the world.
I feel guilty,
having not once
thought of Father.

I can’t wish for him
to appear until I know where we’ll be.

May 18
A Kiss

The horn on our ship
blows and blows,
waking everyone
from a week-long nap.

A sure answer,
honk honk,
seems close enough
and real enough
to call everyone on deck.

A gigantic ship
with an American flag
moves closer.
Men in white uniform
wave and smile.

Our commander wears
his navy jacket and hat, so white and so crisp.

Now I realize
why I like him so much.
In uniform,
he looks just like Father.

He boards the other ship, salutes and shakes hands with a man whose hair grows on his face
not on his head in the color of flames.

I had not known
such hair was possible.

We clap and clap
as the ships draw together and kiss.

Boxes and boxes
pass onto our deck.
Oranges, apples, bananas,
cold sweet bubbly drinks, chocolate drops, fruity gum.

The American ship
tows ours
with a steel braid
thick as my body.

Our rescue now certain, the party blossoms
as food suddenly comes up from below.
Ramen noodles, beef jerky, dried shrimp, butter biscuits, tamarind pods, canned fish, and drums and drums of real water.

Mother says,
*People share when they know
they have escaped hunger.*
Shouldn’t people share because there is hunger?

That night I stand behind blowing blankets and pour fresh water all over my skin.

How sweet water tastes even when mixed with soap.

May 24
Golden Fuzz

Water, water still everywhere
but in the distance appears a black dot.

We are told
to pack
our crisscrossed packs and line up in a single file.

Twenty at a time
board a motorboat
heading toward the dot.

An arm extends to help us board,
an arm hairy with fuzz.

I touch it,
so real and long,
not knowing if I will have another chance to touch golden fuzz.

I pluck one hair.

Mother slaps my hand.
Brother Quang speaks quickly in the language I must learn.

The fuzzy man laughs.

I’m grateful the boat starts to rock, so Mother hasn’t the composure to scold me, not just yet.

I roll my fuzzy souvenir between my thumb and finger and can’t help but smile.

May 26
We have landed on an island
called Guam,
which no one can pronounce except Brother Quang, who becomes translator for all.

Many others arrived before us
and are living in green tents
and sleeping on cots.

We eat inside a huge tent where Brother Vũ
becomes head chef,
heating up cans of beef and potatoes
tasting like salty vomit.

We eat only canned fruit
in thick syrup,

and everyone wants extras
but we get only a cup.

Brother Vũ somehow brings home
a huge can,
pumping it to work out
his arm muscles.

We eat straight from the can as I search for cherries and grapes.

May 28
Life in Waiting

A routine starts
as soon as we settle into our tent.

Camp workers teach us English
mornings and afternoons.

Evenings we have to ourselves.

We watch movies outdoors with images projected onto a white sheet.
Brother Quang translates into a microphone,
his voice sad and slow.

If it’s a young cowboy like Clint Eastwood,
everyone cheers.
If it’s an old cowboy,
like John Wayne,
most of us boo
and go swimming.

The Disney cartoons
lure out the girls, who always surround Brother Vũ,
begging him to break
yet another piece of wood.

I can still hear them begging when I go sit with Brother Khôi, who rarely speaks anymore but I’m happy to be near him.

June to early July
Someone should be kissed for having the heart to send cases of fish sauce to Guam.

Everything is more edible with nước mắm.

Brother Vũ sautés the beef-and-potato goo with onions and sprinkles on the magic sauce before serving the mess with rice.

Lines extend to the beach.

Someone catches a sea creature puffy and watery like a cucumber.

Brother Vũ slices it into slippery strips and stews it with seaweed.
and the magic sauce.

So many appetites
wake up
that Brother Vũ
just has time to cook rice
and serve it with plain fish sauce.

People begin to cook
as long as they can get a cup of nước mắm.

Brother Khôi hands it out in the same white cups as tea.

Both dark brown,
so of course
I drink a gulp of the most salty,
most bitter,
most fishy
tea ever.

My head whirls
and my breath stinks
for days.

I do not mind.
Mother wants to sell the amethyst ring
Father brought back from America, where he trained in the navy
before I was born.

She wants to buy
needles and thread,
fabric and sandals
from the camp’s
black market.

I have never seen her without this purple rock.
I can’t fall asleep
unless I twist the ring and count circles.

Brother Quang says,
NO!
What’s the point of new shirts and sandals

if you lose the last tangible remnant of love?

I don’t understand what he said but I agree.
Some choose to go to France because many Vietnamese moved there when North and South divided years ago.

Uncle Sơn says come with his family to Canada, where his sister lives and can help watch over us until Father returns.

Mother knows his wife would mind. She tells him Canada is too cold.

We stand in line to fill out papers. Every family must decide by tonight, when fireworks will explode in honor of America’s birth.

Mother starts to write “Paris,” home of a cousin she has never met.
The man behind us whispers, Choose America,
more opportunities there, especially for a family with boys ready to work.

Mother whispers back,
My sons
must first go to college.

If they’re smart
America will give them scholarships.

Mother chooses.

_July 4_
Another Tent City

We are flown to another tent city
in humid, hot Florida, where alligators are shown as entertainment.

The people in charge
bring in Saigon-famous singers to raise refugee spirits, but faces keep twisting with worries.

For a family to leave,
an American must come to camp and sponsor a family.

We wait and wait,
but Mother says a possible widow, three boys, and a pouty girl make too huge a family by American standards.

A family of three in the tent to our left gets sponsored to Georgia;

the couple to our right goes to South Carolina.
Newcomers leave before us.
Mother can barely eat, while Brother Quang
picks the skin at his elbows.

I don't mind being here.
My hair is growing as I've become dark and strong from running and swimming.

Then by chance Mother learns sponsors prefer those whose applications say “Christians.”

Just like that Mother amends our faith, saying all beliefs
are pretty much the same.

July to early August
A man comes who owns a store
that sells cars
and wants to train
one young man
to be a mechanic.

He keeps holding up one finger
before picking Brother Quang, whose studies in engineering impress him.

Mother doesn’t care what the man came looking for.

By the time
she is done
staring, blinking,
wiping away tears,
all without speaking English,

our entire family has a sponsor
to Alabama.

August 7
Our sponsor
looks just like an American should.

Tall and pig-bellied,
black cowboy hat,
tan cowboy boots,
cigar smoking,
teeth shining,
red in face,
golden in hair.

I love him immediately and imagine him
to be good-hearted and loud and the owner of a horse.

August 8
PART III
Alabama
We’re giddy
when we get off the airplane.

Our cowboy,
who never takes off
his tall, tall hat,
delivers us
to his huge house, where grass
spreads out so green it looks painted.

Stay until you feel ready.

We smile and unpack
the two outfits
we each own.

One look at our cowboy’s wife, arms, lips, eyes
contorted into knots,
and we repack.
We sit and sleep in the lowest level of our cowboy’s house, where we never see
the wife.

I must stand on a chair that stands on a tea table to see the sun and the moon
out a too-high window.

The wife insists
we keep out of her neighbors’ eyes.

Mother shrugs.
More room here than two mats on a ship.

I wish she wouldn’t try to make something bad better.

She calls a family meeting.

*Until you children master English,
you must think, do, wish* for nothing else.
Not your father,
not our old home,
not your old friends,
not our future.

She tries to mean it about Father, but I know at times
words are just words.

August 16
Brother Quang says
add an s to nouns
to mean more than one even if there’s already an s sitting there.

Glass Glass-es

All day
I practice
squeezing hisses
through my teeth.

Whoever invented English must have loved snakes.

August 17
Most food
our cowboy brings
is wrapped in plastic
or pushed into cans, while chicken and beef
are chopped and frozen.

We live on
rice, soy sauce, canned corn.

Today our cowboy brings a paper bucket of chicken, skin crispy and golden,
smelling of perfection.

Brother Khôi recoils, vowing to never eat
anything with wings.

Our cowboy bites on a leg, grins to show teeth and gums.

I wonder if he’s so friendly because his wife is so mean.

We bite.
The skin tastes as promised, crunchy and salty, hot and spicy.

But Mother wipes
the corners of her mouth before passing her piece into her napkin.

Brother Vũ gags.

Our cowboy scrunches
his brows,
surely thinking,
why are his refugees so picky?

Brother Quang forces a swallow before explaining we are used to fresh-killed chicken
that roamed the yard

snacking on grains and worms.

Such meat grows
tight in texture,
smelling of meadows
and tasting sweet.

I bite down on a thigh;
might as well bite down on bread soaked in water.

Still,
I force yum-yum sounds.

I hope to ride
the horse our cowboy surely has.

August 20
Out the Too-High Window

Green mats of grass
in front of every house.

Vast windows in front of sealed curtains.

Cement lanes where no one walks.

Big cars pass not often.

Not a noise.

Clean, quiet loneliness.

August 21
Add an s to verbs
acted by one person in the present tense,
even if there’s already an s sound nearby.

She choose-s
He refuse-s

I’m getting better
at hissing,
no longer spitting
on my forearms.

August 22
Our cowboy
  in an even taller hat finds us a house
on Princess Anne Road, pays rent ahead
three months.

Mother could not believe his generosity
until Brother Quang says the American government gives sponsors money.

Mother is even more amazed by the generosity of the American government
until Brother Quang says
it’s to ease the guilt of losing the war.

Mother’s face crinkles
like paper on fire.
She tells Brother Quang to clamp shut his mouth.

*People living on others’ goodwill cannot afford
  political opinions.*
I inspect our house.

Two bedrooms,
one for my brothers,
one for Mother and me.

A washing machine,
because no one here
will scrub laundry
in exchange for a bowl of rice.

The stove spews out clean blue flames,
unlike the ashy coals
back home.

What I love best:
the lotus-pod shower,
where heavy drops

will massage my scalp as if I were standing in a monsoon.

What I don’t love:
pink sofas, green chairs,
plastic cover on a table,
stained mattresses,
old clothes,
unmatched dishes.

All from friends
of our cowboy.
Even at our poorest we always had beautiful furniture and matching dishes.

Mother says be grateful.

I’m trying.

August 24
As soon as we have an address Mother writes
all the way to the North where Father’s brother anchors down the family line in their ancestral home.

It’s the first time
Mother has been allowed to contact anyone in the North since the country divided.

It’ll be the first time Father’s brother learns of his disappearance.

Unless,
Father has sent word that he’s safe
after all.

I shiver
with hope.

August 25
Always an exception.

Do not add an s to certain nouns.

One deer;
two deer.

Why no s for two deer, but an s for two monkeys?

Brother Quang says no one knows.

So much for rules!

Whoever invented English should be bitten by a snake.
I study the dictionary because grass and trees do not grow faster just because
I stare.

I look up

Jane: not listed

sees: to eyeball something

Spot: a stain

run: to move really fast

Meaning: _______ eyeballs stain move.

I throw the dictionary down and ask Brother Quang.

Jane is a name,
not in the dictionary.
Spot is a common name for a dog.

(Girl named) Jane sees (dog named) Spot run.

I can’t read a baby book.

Who will believe I was reading Nhật Linh?

But then, who here knows who he is?

August 27
Brother Quang
is tired of translating.
Our sponsor takes me to register for school alone.

As my personal cowboy
for the day,
he will surely
let me ride his horse.

I start to climb
into his too-tall truck but his two fingers
walk in the air.

This means
I’m to walk to school.

Turn right where flowers big as dinner plates grow strangely _blue._

Turn left where purple fluffy wands

arch on tall bushes
inviting butterflies.
Sweat beads plump up on my cowboy’s upper lip.
My armpits embarrass me.
I must remember
to not raise the reins high.

We walk and walk on a road
where the horizon
keeps extending.

Finally,
we stop at a fat, red brick building.

Paperwork, paperwork with a woman who pats my head
while shaking her own.

I step back,
hating pity,

having learned from Mother that the pity giver
feels better,
ever the pity receiver.

On the walk home
I take a deep breath,
forcing myself to say,
You, hor-ssssse?
Hee, hee, hee.
I go, go.
My personal cowboy shakes his head.

I repeat myself
and gallop.

He scrunches his face.

I say, Hor-ssssse
and Hee, hee, hee,
until my throat hurts.

We get home.

Brother Quang
has to translate,
after all.

No, Mr. Johnston doesn’t have a horse,
nor has he ever ridden one.

What kind of a cowboy is he?

To make it worse,
the cowboy explains
horses here go
neigh, neigh, neigh,
not hee, hee, hee.
No they don’t.

Where am I?
Fourth Rule

Some verbs switch all over just because.

I am
She is They are
He was
They were

Would be simpler
if English and life were logical.

August 30
Starting tomorrow everyone must leave the house.

Mother starts sewing at a factory; Brother Quang begins repairing cars.

The rest of us must go to school, repeating the last grade, left unfinished.

Brother Vụ wants to be a cook or teach martial arts, not waste a year as the oldest senior.

Mother says one word: College.

Brother Khôi gets an old bicycle to ride, but Mother says I’m too young for one even though I’m a ten-year-old in the fourth grade, when everyone else is nine.

Mother says,

Worry instead about getting sleep because from now on no more naps.
You will eat lunch at school with friends.

What friends?

You’ll make some.

What if I can’t?

You will.

What will I eat?

What your friends eat.

But what will I eat?

Be surprised.

I hate surprises.
Be agreeable.

Not without knowing what I’m agreeing to.

Mother sighs, walking away.

September 1
School!

I wake up with dragonflies zipping through my gut.

I eat nothing.

I take each step toward school evenly, trying to hold my stomach steady.

It helps that the morning air glides cool like a constant washcloth against my face.

Deep breaths.

I’m the first student in class.

My new teacher has brown curls looped tight to her scalp like circles in a beehive.
She points to her chest:
MiSSS SScott,
saying it three times,
each louder
with ever more spit.

I repeat, MiSSS SScott, careful to hiss every s.

She doesn’t seem impressed.

I tap my own chest:
Hà.

She must have heard
ha,
as in funny ha-ha-ha.

She fakes a laugh.

I repeat, Hà,
and wish I knew enough English to tell her
to listen for the diacritical mark,

this one directing the tone
downward.

My new teacher tilts
her head back,
fakes
an even sadder laugh.
I face the class.
MiSSS SScott speaks.
Each classmate says something.

I don’t understand,
but I see.

Fire hair on skin dotted with spots.
Fuzzy dark hair on skin shiny as lacquer.
Hair the color of root on milky skin.
Lots of braids on milk chocolate.
White hair on a pink boy.
Honey hair with orange ribbons on see-through skin.
Hair with barrettes in all colors on bronze bread.

I’m the only straight black hair
on olive skin.
The bell rings.
Everyone stands.
I stand.

They line up;
so do I.

Down a hall.
Turn left.
Take a tray.
Receive food.
Sit.

On one side of the bright, noisy room, light skin.
Other side,
dark skin.

Both laughing, chewing,
as if it never occurred to them
someone medium
would show up.

I don’t know where to sit any more than I know how to eat
the pink sausage
snuggled inside bread
shaped like a corncob, smeared with sauces yellow and red.

I think they are making fun of the Vietnamese flag until I remember no one here likely knows that flag’s colors.

I put down the tray and wait in the hallway.

September 2
11:30 a.m.
Another bell,
another line,
this time outside.

Every part of the rainbow
surrounds me,
shouting, pushing.

A pink boy with white hair on his head and white eyebrows and white eyelashes pulls my arm hair.

Laughter.

It’s true my arm hair
grows so long and black.

Maybe he is curious about my long, black arm hair like I was curious about the golden fuzz
on the arm
of the rescue-ship sailor.
He pokes my cheek.

Howls from everyone.

He pokes my chest.

I see nothing but squeezed eyes,
twisted mouths.

No,
they’re not curious.

I want to pluck out every white hair to see if the boy’s scalp matches the pink of his face.

I wish this but walk away.
The pink boy and two loud friends follow me home.

I count each step to walk faster.

I won’t let them see me run.

I count in English, forcing it to the front of my mind.

I can’t help but glance back.

The pink boy shouts, showing a black hole where sharp teeth glow.

I walk faster, count faster in English.

Not that I care to understand what Pink Boy says, but I have to if I’m to laugh back at him one day.

September 2
After school
Quiet Inside

Brother Khôi is home, not talking.

We sit together
shelling peanuts.
I keep my day inside.

Mother comes home
with two fingers
wrapped in white.
The electric machine
sews so fast.

Brother Quang comes home, throws down his uniform shirt,
goes to the bathroom.
At dinner
his fingernails are still rimmed in black oil.

Brother Vũ comes in whistling.

He eats

two, three, four pork chops.
I eat
one, two chops.

I have a feeling having muscles makes whistling possible.

September 2
Evening
I sneak into my brothers’ room.

The full moon shines on the bulkiest lump.

I shake it awake.
Outside!

Brother Vư swats my hand but follows me.

Moonlight turns us silver.

They pulled my arm hair.
They threw rocks at me.
They promised to stomp on my chest.

Brother Vư yawns.

A boy did pull my arm hair!

Brother Vư pats my head.
Ignore him.
It’s not like I follow him around.
Why were you whistling?

Someone called me Ching Chong.

Is that good?

Didn’t sound good.
Then he tripped me,
so I flew up and almost scissor-kicked him in the face.

You missed?

I wanted him to stop,
not hurt him.
I didn’t even like seeing him scared.

I would have kicked him.
Teach me to fly-kick, please.

Not with your temper.

I shout, I’m so mad.
I shouldn’t have to run away.

Tears come.

Brother Vũ
has always been afraid of my tears.
I’ll teach you defense.

How will that help me?

He smiles huge, so certain of himself.
You’ll see.

September 2
Late
Next morning
halfway down the block, away from Mother’s eyes, I hear the clink clank
of Brother Khôi’s bicycle.

He stops and pats
the upper bar
of the triangle frame.

I sit sidesaddle,
holding on to the handlebar.
The edges of our hands touch.

As we glide away
I ask,
Every day?

I feel his chin
nod into the top of my head.

After school too?

Another chin nod.
We glide and I feel as if I’m floating.
MiSSS SScott
points to me, then to the letters
of the English alphabet.

I say
$A\;B\;C$ and so on.

She tells the class
to clap.

I frown.

MiSSS SScott
points to the numbers
along the wall.

I count up to twenty.

The class claps
on its own.

I’m furious,
unable to explain
I already learned fractions
and how to purify river water.

So this is what dumb feels like.

I hate, hate, hate it.

September 10
I wish

Brother Khôi wouldn’t keep inside
how he endures
the hours in school,

that Mother wouldn’t hide her bleeding fingers, that Brother Quang wouldn’t be so angry after work.

I wish

our cowboy could be persuaded to buy a horse,

that I could be invisible
until I can talk back, that English could be learned without so many rules.

I wish
Father would appear in my class speaking beautiful English as he does French and Chinese and hold out his hand for mine.

Mostly
I wish
I were still smart.

September 11
Brother Vũ
now makes everyone
call him
Vũ Lee,
a name I must say without giggling
to get defense lessons.

I need the lessons.

I’m hiding in class
by staring at my shoes.

I’m hiding during lunch in the bathroom,
eating hard rolls
saved from dinner.

I’m hiding during outside time in the same bathroom.

I’m hiding after school until Brother Khôi
rides up to our secret corner.

With Vũ Lee
I squat in weight on legs,
back straight,
arms at my sides,
fingers relaxed,
eyes everywhere at once.

I’m practicing to be seen.

September 13
Neighbors

Eggs explode like smears of snot
on our front door.

Just dumb kids,
says our cowboy.

Bathroom paper hangs like ghosts
from our willow.

More dumb kids,
says our cowboy.

A brick shatters the front window, landing on our dinner table along with a note.

Brother Quang
refuses to translate.

Mother shakes her head when Vu Lee pops his muscles.

Our cowboy
calls the police,
who tell us
to stay inside.

_Hogwash,_
our cowboy says,
then spits a brown blob
of tobacco.

I repeat, _Hogwash,_ puckering for the ending of _sssshhhhhhh._

Mother decides
we must meet
our neighbors.

Our cowboy leads,
giving us each a cowboy hat to be tilted
while saying,
_Good mornin’._

Only I wear the hat.

In the house

to our right a bald man
closes his door.

Next to him
a woman with yellow hair
slams hers.
Next to her shouts reach us
behind a door unopened.

Redness crawls across my brothers’ faces.
Mother pats their backs.

Our cowboy leads us to the house on our left.

An older woman throws up her arms and hugs us.

We’re so startled
we stand like trees.

She points to her chest:
MiSSsisss WaSShington.

She hugs our cowboy
and kisses him.

I thought only husbands and wives
do that when alone.

We find out
MiSSsisss WaSShington
is a widow and retired teacher.
She has no children but has a dog named Lassie and a garden that takes up her backyard.

She volunteers to tutor us all.

My time with her
will be right after school.

I’m afraid to tell her how much help I’ll need.

September 14
MiSSSiSSs WaSSShington
has her own rules.

She makes me memorize
one new word a day
and practice it
ten times in conversation.

For every new word that sticks to my brain she gives me
fruit in bite sizes, drowning in sweet, white fluff;
cookies with drops of chocolate small as rain;
flat, round, pan-fried cakes floating in syrup.

My vocabulary grows!

She makes me learn rules I’ve never noticed,
like a, an, and the,
which act as little megaphones to tell the world whose English is still secondhand.

The house is red.
But:
We live in a house.
A, an, and the
do not exist in Vietnamese and we understand each other just fine.

I pout,
but MissISSISSssss WasSShington says every language has annoyances and illogical rules, as well as sensible beauty.

She has an answer for everything, just like Mother.

September 16
I now understand

when they make fun of my name, yelling ha-ha-ha down the hall

when they ask if I eat dog meat, barking and chewing and falling down laughing when they wonder if I lived in the jungle with tigers, growling and stalking on all fours.

I understand
because Brother Khôi nodded into my head on the bike ride home when I asked if kids said the same things at his school.

I understand
and wish I could go back to not understanding.
Our cowboy says
our neighbors
would be more like neighbors if we agree to something at the Del Ray Southern Baptist Church.

I’ve seen the church name on a sign where blaring yellow sun rays spell GOD.

Our cowboy and his wife wait for us
in the very first row.
He’s smiling;
she’s not.

A plump man
runs onto the stage
SHOUTING.

Everyone except us
greets him,
HA LE LU DA.

The more he SHOUTS,
the more everyone sings
HA LE LU DA.
Later a woman
smelling of honeysuckle signals for all of us to follow.

Mother and I are told to change into shapeless white gowns.

We line up in a hallway too bright and too bare, where my brothers await us frowning,
all wearing the same shapeless white gowns.

I giggle.
Mother pinches me
then steps forward first.

The plump man waits for her
in a tiny pool.
One hand holds her nose,
another hand on her back, pushing her under.

I start to jump into the pool, but Mother is standing again, coughing,
hair matted to her face, eyes narrowing
at me.

Each of my brothers
gets dipped.

My turn comes,
no matter how
I laser-eye Mother to stop it.

And yet
it’s not over.

We must get dressed and line up onstage
next to the plump man,
our cowboy,
and his smiling wife.
Her lips curl up even more as people line up to kiss our cheeks.

Drops from wet hair
drip down my back.

Bumps enlarge on my chilled skin
as I realize
we will be coming back every Sunday.

September 21
Can’t Help

Mother taps her nails
on the dining table,
her signal for solitude to chant.

I shuffle off to our room but am still with her through my ears.

She chants,
Nam Mô A Di Đà Phật
Nam Mô Quan Thế Âm Bồ Tát

Such quiet tones after a day of
shouts and HA LE LU DAs.

Clang clang clang,
a spoon chimes
against a glass bowl.

Nothing like
clear-stream bell echoes from a brass gong.

Instead of jasmine incense,
Mother burns dried orange peels.
Ashy bitter citrus invades our room.

Nothing like
the floral wafts
that once calmed me.

I try
but can’t fall sleep, needing amethyst-ring twirls
and her lavender scent.

I’m not as good as Mother at making do.

Finally she comes in and turns from me,
her signal for more
time alone.

I lie frozen, sniffing for traces of lavender.

Too faint
yet I dare not roll closer.

She sighs,
extends it into a snifflle.

Where are you?
Should we keep hoping?
She thinks
I am asleep.

More sniffles,
so gentle
I would miss them
by inhaling too deeply.

Come home,
come home and see how our children have grown.

All my life I’ve wondered what it’s like to know someone for forever

then poof
he’s gone.

Another sigh.

It’s more difficult here than I imagined.

I thought so,
despite her own rule
Mother can’t help yearning for Father any more than I can help tasting ripe papaya
in my sleep.
Spelling Rules

Sometimes
the spelling changes
when adding an s.

Knife becomes knives.

Sometimes
a c is used
instead of a k,
even if it makes more sense
for cat to be spelled kat.

Sometimes
a y is used
instead of an e,
even if
it makes more sense
for moldy to be spelled molde.

Whoever invented English should have learned to spell.

September 30
Our cowboy likes to bring us gifts.

The breathing catfish was Mother’s favorite.

I couldn’t watch Vu Lee kill and clean it,
but it tasted so good.

After getting us dipped at church, our cowboy brought gifts even more often.

Vu Lee always asks for beef jerky, pointing to his muscles.

I prefer really fat grapes.

Today our cowboy brings chips and chocolate.

My brothers and I finish the chips
in a flash.
Later Mother throws away what’s left of the candy.

After she falls asleep,
I retrieve the bars.

They’ll be better than hard rolls
for lunch.

October 4
My word for today
is delicious,
đi lit-sì-ishss.

MiSSSisss WaSShington asks,
Was your lunch delicious?

Before speaking,
I have to translate
in my head.

She waits.

I eat candy in toilet.

MiSSSisss WaSShington
looks panicked.
WHAT?

I realize my mistake.
Oh, the toilet.

She doesn’t look
any happier.

I add,
Not candy all time.

But you always eat in the bathroom?

I nod.

Why?

How can I explain dragonflies do somersaults in my stomach whenever I think of the noisy room
full of mouths
chewing and laughing?

I’m still translating
when her eyes get red.

I’ll pack you a lunch and you can eat at your desk.

No eat in class.

I’ll fix that.

Things will get better,
just you wait.

I don’t believe her but it feels good
that someone knows.
At lunch the next day
I stay in class.

MiSSS SScott nods.

Can it be this easy?

Inside my first
brown paper bag:
a white meat sandwich,
an apple,
crunchy curly things
sprinkled with salt, and a cookie dotted with chocolate raindrops.

Something salty,
something sweet,
perfect.

I hear pounding footsteps
in the long hall.

I stop chewing.

Two students run into class,
giggling.

I firm my muscles, ready for the giggles to explode into laughter thrown at me.

But smiles appear instead.

The girl has red hair swaying to her bottom, a skirt falling to her calves.

She says, Pam. I hear Pem.

The boy of coconut-shell skin is dressed better than for church, a purple bow tie, a white white shirt that wouldn’t wrinkle even if he rolled down a hill.

His shaved head is so shiny and perfect I want to touch it.

He speaks slowly and loudly, but I don’t mind because he’s still smiling.

He says, Steven.
I hear SSsi-Ti-Vân.

I have not seen them in class.
But then, I mostly stare at my shoes.

I will write in my journal October 14 is Most Relieved Day,
as I have noted April 30 was Saigon Is Gone Day and September 2 was Longest Day Ever.

Though I was saving
Most Relieved Day

for Father’s return,
he can have the title:
My Life’s Best Day.
Pink Boy
stands at the board.

He can’t multiply
18 by 42.

I go to the board,
chalk the answer
in five moves.

My cheekbones lift to the ceiling
until I see horror
on the faces of Pem and SSi-Ti-Vân.

Pink Boy is glowing red against white hair,
white eyebrows,
and white eyelashes.

MiSSS SScott
nudges me toward my seat.

Pem reaches for my hand,
hers trembling.
I know
Pink Boy will get me, but right now
I feel smart.
Hair

One day
the honey-hair girl takes her pink ribbons
and knots pigtails in my hair.

She stares,
shakes her head,
yanks back her ribbons.
Pink don’t look good on you.

Then three girls of bronze-bread skin
remove colorful barrettes from their hair and twist onto my head
so many braids.

The girls’ hair holds the shape of braids
even without barrettes.

Pem and SSsi-Ti-Vân nod, so I keep still.

Walking home,
my shadow shows
eels dancing on my head with tails in shapes of bows, stars, hearts.
Mother and Brothers
notice,
pause,
then go on with their day.

It isn’t easy to sleep on a pile of plastic barrettes.

The next morning when the girls
slip off the barrettes, my hair falls back
to being straight.

The girls
yank my flat strands,
walk away.

I’ve spent my life
wishing for long hair and this is what I get.

October 23
Vu Lee no longer has time for just me.

At sunrise he throws newspapers onto porches.

After school he flips perfect circles of beef.

At sunset he teaches Bruce Lee moves in our front yard.

We line up in five rows, squatting and shifting, the only moves he has taught us.

I make sure to get in the front row.

First came the eager boys.

Next came the giggly girls.
Then came our neighbors who couldn’t help their curiosity.

They wave back now,
at times bringing jiggly, colorful food
we don’t eat.

Everyone in Vu Lee’s class wears yellow.
Some even bought suits exactly like Bruce Lee’s.

Brothers Quang and Khôi join too.

Once I saw Mother
behind the curtains,
smiling.

I squatted low and sturdy then.

October 28
MiSSS SScott shows the class photographs of a burned, naked girl running, crying down a dirt road of people climbing, screaming, desperate to get on the last helicopter out of Saigon of skeletal refugees, cramped aboard a sinking fishing boat, reaching up to the heavens for help of mounds of combat boots abandoned by soldiers of the losing side.

She’s telling the class where I’m from.

She should have shown something about papayas and Tết.

No one would believe me but at times
I would choose wartime in Saigon over peacetime in Alabama.

October 29
Pancake Face

Pem is dressed in a skirt to the floor like the pioneers
in our textbook.

SSsi-Ti-Vân
wears a beard
like President Lincoln.

I didn’t know
today is pretend day.

Pink Boy keeps asking,
"What are you?"

By the end of school
he yells an answer:
"She should be a pancake."
"She has a pancake face."

It doesn’t make sense until it does.

I run,
hearing laughter
"loud loud loud,
which still echoes when Mother comes home."
I can’t keep the day inside anymore.

Mother asks,
What’s a pancake?

Tears gush because I can’t make myself explain
a pancake is very very flat.

October 31
Halloween
Mother strokes my head.

Chant, my child,
Breathe in, peaceful mind.
Breathe out, peaceful smile.

She strokes my back.

Chant, my daughter;
your whispers will bloom and shelter you from words
you need not hear.

Chant
Nam Mô A Di Đà Phật
Nam Mô Quan Thế Âm Bồ Tát.

She strokes my arm.

I chant,
wanting the gentle strokes to continue forever.

I chant,
wanting Mother’s calmness to sink into me.
I’m quiet
during my lesson
with MiSSSisss WaSShington.

For a long time
I stare at the floral wallpaper and shelves full of books, then I notice
a framed photograph of a boy in uniform.

I had not known of her son Tom or of his death as a twenty-year-old soldier in the very place where I was born.

I never thought
the name of my country could sound so sad.

I’m afraid to look at MiSSSisss WaSShington.
You hate me?

Child, child.

She comes close
and hugs me.

Right then I tell her about the pancake.

She hugs me tighter, then pulls out a book.

A book of photographs: a dragon dance at Têt, schoolgirls in white áo dài, a temple built on a tree trunk.

Tom had sent home these photographs of a hot, green country that he loved and hated just the same.

I suck in breath: a photograph of a papaya tree swaying broad, fanlike leaves in the full sun, showing off a bundle of fat orange piglets.

Excited, I yell, .getPage(367,406,382,409) Du getPage(382,406,385,409) Đu! I’m stabbing at the image. Best food.
Papaya?
Your favorite food is papaya?

By the time I teach her đu đũ
and she teaches me doo-doo we’re laughing so hard we’re hungry for pancakes.

She tells me
to take the book home.

November 3
Before school
our cowboy shows up.
MiSSSisss WaSShington told him about the pancake.

He whispers to Mother and Brother Quang.
All will escort me to school with MiSSSisss WaSShington.

I do not feel good.

In the principal’s office sit Pink Boy and his mother.

It’s very hot in here.

Lots of strained voices holding in anger.

Finally all eyes
are on Pink Boy, who wrestles out, Sorry.

I feel like throwing up.

Mother rescues him:
We know you’re from a proper family and did not realize the damage of your insult.

While Brother Quang translates, Pink Boy’s eyes let me know he hates me even more.

November 5
MiSSS SScott
shows photographs of the S shape
of Vietnam,
of green mountains and long beaches,
of a statue of the Buddha reclining.

She asks me,
Would you like to say anything?

I know Buddha.

I hear laughter
and a murmur building:
Boo-Da, Boo-Da.

MiSSS SScott hushes them.

All day I hear whispers:
Boo-Da, Boo-Da.

I watch the clock,
listen for the final bell,
and dash.

Pink Boy and friends follow, releasing shouts of Boo-Da, Boo-Da
as I put one leg
in front of the other faster
faster
but not fast enough to not hear them scream
Boo-Da, Boo-Da.

I turn down
the wrong street,
away from the corner where Brother Khôi would be.

I have no choice
but to run.

I turn right where purple flowers curve like baby moons over butterfly bushes.

Footsteps pound
right behind me.

Turn left where flowers grow blue.

I wish I could control it, but the plates of flowers are now blue smears
from my near tears.

Boo-Da, Boo-Da
breathes into the back of my neck.
Faster, faster.
My legs try,
but the shouts are upon me.

Someone pulls my hair, forcing me to turn and see a black hole in a pink face: Boo-Da, Boo-Da Girl.

My palms cover my eyes.

I run.

All the while surging from my gut:

`fire` `sourness`
`weight` `anger` `loneliness`
`confusion` `embarrassment` `shame.`

November 7
Hate It

I don’t make it inside the house, but sit
under the willow tree, dig a hole
and into it
scream scream scream

I hate everyone!!!!

A lion’s paw rips up my throat, still I scream

I hate everyone!!!!

Hands grip my shoulders.

MiSSisssss WaSShington is on her knees.

Child, child, come with me.

I hate everyone!!!!

She hoists me up
by my armpits
and drags me across the yard.

_You poor child,_
_tell me, tell me._

It hurts too much to keep screaming, but it feels good to thrash about like a captured lizard.

Inside her house, MiSSSisss WaSSShington throws her body on mine.

_Hush, hush,_
_hush, hush._

She says it over and over like a chant, slowly. Slowly the screams that never stopped inside my head cool to a real whisper.

_I hate everyone!_

_Even your mama?_
She crosses her eyes, puckers her lips.

I stop myself from laughing.

She pats my hand.

That one gesture dissolves the last of my hate spell.

November 7
After school
Brother Quang’s Turn

Brother Quang comes home with happy shouts.

He did it, repairing a car no one else could.

From now on he’s to work only on engines.

Mother smiles so hard she cries.

I pout.

When is it going to be my turn?

November 12
It’s time to tell Mother why misery
keeps pouncing on me.

I used to buy less pork so I could buy fried dough.

I know.

You do?

What else?

I used to like making the girl who shared my desk cry.

She tilts her head.

I know, Mother, I know, very bad.

She nods.

Now they make me cry.
Will I be punished forever?
Forever is quite long.

There’s more;
it’s really bad.

She lifts an eyebrow.

At dawn on Tết
I tapped my big toe
to the tile floor
first.

She widens her eyes.

I hate being told I can’t do something because I’m a girl!

She doesn’t scold me,
just nods.

Did I ruin the luck
of the whole family?
Is that why we’re here?

My child,
how you shoulder the world!

I was superstitious,
that’s all.
If anything,
you gave us luck
because we got out
and we’re here.

Lucky to be here?

Just wait,
you’ll see.

I don’t want to wait.
It’s awful now.

Is it really so unbearable?

They chase me.
They yell “Boo-Da, Boo-Da” at me.
They pull my arm hair.
They call me Pancake Face.
They clap at me in class.
And you want me to wait?
Can I hit them?

Oh, my daughter,
at times you have to fight, but preferably
not with your fists.

November 14
Brother Quang takes us to the grocery store. Mother buys everything to make egg rolls for a coming holiday when Americans eat a turkey the size of a baby.

She has me ask the butcher, Please grind our pork.

I’m sure I said it right, but the butcher sharpens his face, slams down our meat, and motions us away.

Mother wrinkles her brows, thinking, pausing, then rings the buzzer again.

Please, she says. It comes out, Peezzz.

The butcher turns away without a word.

Mother presses the buzzer
for a long time.

When the butcher returns, he hears a lot of Vietnamese in a voice stern and steady, from eyes even more so.

Mother ends with a clear, NOW!

The butcher stares then takes our meat
to the grinder.

November 22
Du Đu Face

Again they’re yelling,
Boo-Da, Boo-Da,
but I know to run toward Brother Khôi
two corners away.

Enough time
for them to repeat hundreds of Boo-Das.

Enough time
for me to turn and yell, Gee-sus, Gee-sus.

I love how they stop,
mouths open.

My heart lifting,
I run and shout,
Bully!
Coward!
Pink Snot Face!

Words I learned from them
on the playground.

I turn to see Pink Boy coming
close to me.

No longer pink,
he’s red,
blood-orange red
like a ripe papaya.

Đu Đũ Face!

It’s not my fault
if his friends hear Doo-doo Face and are laughing
right at him.

Brother Khôi is waiting.
I jump on.

December 4
Friday

SSsi-Ti-Vân heard it from Pem who heard it from the honey-hair girl who heard it from the dot-on-face girl who heard it from the white-hair boy who heard it from all three girls in braids that

Pink Boy

has gotten his sixth-grade cousin, a girl two heads taller than the tallest of us,
with arm muscles that run up and down like mice, to agree to beat me up

when we come back

Monday.

December 5
I don’t have to tell Brother Khôi, who heard in the halls of his school that my face is to be flattened flatter tomorrow.

You don’t have a flat face, he says. Besides, I have a plan.

December 7
Five minutes till the last bell
I lean toward the door, legs bouncing,
books left on the floor.

Rrriiinnggg

I run,
Pem and SSsi-Ti-Vân
close behind.

Outside
Pem and I exchange
coats with hoods.

Pem heads down
my usual path.
I zip to the left.

SSsi-Ti-Vân
stays to block the door.

Running so fast,
I fly above the sidewalk.

Alone.
They must all be with Pem.

I stop at the new corner where Brother Khôi said to wait.

Where is he?

Footsteps explode
from the street
that smacks into mine.

Pink Boy!

December 8
3:36 p.m.
Pink Boy plows toward me.

I squat in đứng tần, facing him.

His right arm extends in a fist.

When he’s close enough for me to see the white arm hair, I shift my upper body to the left, legs sturdy, eyes on the blur that flies past me.

A thud.

Pink Boy writhes on the pavement.

I thought I would love seeing him in pain.

But he looks
more defeated than weak,
more helpless than scared,
liked a caged puppy.

He’s getting up.

If I were to kick him,
it must be now.

December 8
3:38 p.m.
A roar.

Pink Boy and I turn.

A gigantic motorcycle.

The rider in all black stops.

The helmet comes off.

Vu Lee!

WOW!

Pink Boy disappears.

Brother Khôi runs up, out of breath, pushing a bicycle with a flat.

Vu Lee flicks his head.
I climb on first,
wrap my arms around a waist tight as rope.
Brother Khôi climbs on next, one hand holding the handlebar of his bike.

We fly home.

December 8
3:43 p.m.
Vu Lee
now picks me up after school.

So someone is always saving lunch seats
for me, Pem, and SSsi-Ti-Vân;

someone is always inviting us
to a party;

someone is always hoping Vu Lee will offer her a ride,
as he did the huge cousin,
who now not only smiles but waves at us.

Pink Boy
avoids us,
and we’re glad.

December 16
Early Christmas

Mother invites our cowboy and MiSSSisss WaSSshington for egg rolls.

They brought gifts,
not saying Early Christmas, not wanting to embarrass us
for not having anything to exchange.

From our cowboy
to Mother: two just-caught catfish to Brother Quang: tuition for night college to Vu Lee: jerky in ten flavors to Brother Khôi: two fighting fish in separate jars to me: a new coat

We laugh and say,
Perfect!

From MiSSSisss WaSSshington to Mother: a gong and jasmine incense to Brother Quang: an engineering textbook

to Vu Lee: jerky in ten flavors to Brother Khôi: a hamster to me: three packages of something orange and dried My family claps and says, Perfect!

I frown.

December 20
Three pouches of dried papaya

Chewy Sugary
Waxy
Sticky

Not the same
at all.

So mad,
I throw all in the trash.

December 20
Night
Mother slaps my hand.
Learn to compromise.

I refuse to retrieve the pouches, pout
go to bed,
stare at the photograph of a real papaya tree,
wonder if I’ll ever taste sweet, tender, orange flesh again.

GOOONNNNGGGGG
rings out;
how soothing a real gong sounds.

Swirls of incense
reach me,
hovering like a blanket, tugging me in.

I wake up at faint light, guilt heavy on my chest.

I head toward the trash can.

Yet
on the dining table
on a plate
sit strips of papaya
gooey and damp, having been soaked in hot water.

The sugar has melted off leaving plump moist chewy bites.

Humm... Not the same, but not bad at all.

December 20–21
From Now On
Eight months ago,
     war ended.
Four months ago,
     Mother sent our letter.
Today,
     Father’s brother answers.

Still, we know nothing more.

Our uncle even went south to talk with our old neighbors, to find Father’s old friends.

He consulted,
     left word,
     waited until it became obvious he would know nothing more.

His letter doesn’t tell us what to do
   from now on.

We look to Mother.

She doesn’t tell us either.
Ours is a silent
Christmas Eve.
Pem comes over on gift-exchange day with a doll to replace the mouse-bitten one I told her about.

I almost scream because the doll with long black hair is so beautiful.

But I whisper, Thank you.

My high emotions are squashed beneath the embarrassment of not having a gift for her.

December 25
Brother Quang asks
what if Father escaped to Cambodia and is building an army to go back and change history?

Vu Lee asks
what if Father escaped to France but can’t remember his own history, so he builds a new family and is happy?

Brother Khôi asks
what if Father escaped to Tibet after shaving his head and joining a monastery?

I can’t think of anything but can’t let my brothers best me, so I blurt out,

What if

Father is really gone?

From the sad look on their faces
I know
despite their brave guesses they have begun to accept what I said on a whim.
Mother says nothing about Father

but

she chants every night, long chants where her voice wavers between hope and acceptance.

She’s waiting for a sign.

I’ll decide what she decides.

December 30
First day back after Christmas break, I know I’m supposed to wear everything new.

I don’t have anything new except for the coat, and a hand-me-down dress still wrapped in plastic.

It’s beige with blue flowers made from a fabric fuzzy and thick, perfect for this cold day.

Best of all
it’s past my knees,
perfect for a cold bike ride.

Pem is wearing a new skirt falling to her calves, as always.

SSsi-Ti-Vân’s new white shirt looks stiff as a wall.

As soon as I remove my coat, everyone stops talking.
A girl in red velvet comes over to me.
_Don’t ya know flannel is for nightgowns and sheets?_

I panic.

Pem shrugs.
_I can’t wear pants or cut my hair or wear skirts above my calves; what do I care what you wear?_

SSsi-Ti-Vân says,
_It looks like a dress to me._

The red-velvet girl points to the middle of my chest.
_See this flower? They only put that on nightgowns._

I look down at the tiny blue flower barely stitched on.

I rip it off.
_Nightgown no more._

January 5
Seeds

I wear the same dress
to sleep,
telling Mother why.

I pretended not to care,
then no one cared,
so I really didn’t care.

Mother laughs.

I tell her
a much worse embarrassment is not having a gift for Pem.

Mother nods, thinks,
goes to her top drawer.

I was saving this for you for Tệt,
but why wait?

In her palm lies the tin of flower seeds
I had gathered with TiTi.

Perfect for Pem!
Mother always thinks of everything.
Mother runs in after work, hands clenched into white balls, words chopped into grunts, face of ash.

We stare at her left hand.

The amethyst stone is gone!

Brother Quang drives us back to the sewing factory in his car made of mismatched parts.

We search where Mother sat, then retrace her steps to the cafeteria to the bathroom to the parking lot.

We repeat so often we lose count, propelled by Mother’s wild eyes and pressed mouth, frightened of what her expression would be if…
At dusk,
the guards shoo us out.

We’re afraid to look at Mother.
When home,
Mother
retreats to our room,
misses dinner,
remains soundless.

At bedtime
we hear
the gong,
then chanting.

The chant is long,
the voice
low and sure.

Finally
she appears,
looks at each of us.

Your father is truly gone.
Mother wears her brown áo dài brought from home.

Each of my brothers wears a suit, too small or too big.

I wear a pink dress of ruffles and lace, which I hate, but at least it’s definitely a dress.

Each of us faces the altar, holding a lit incense stick between palms in prayer.

Father’s portrait stares back.

This is as old as we’ll ever know him.

That thought turns my eyes red.
Mother says,
We'll chant
for Father's safe passage toward eternal peace,
where his parents await him.

She pauses,
voice choked.

Father won't leave
if we hold on to him.
If you feel like crying, think
at least now
we know.

At least
we no longer live
in waiting.

January 17
I’m trying to tell
MiSSSisss WaSShington
about our ceremony for Father.

But it takes time to match every noun and verb, sort all the tenses,
remember all the articles,
set the tone for every s.

MiSSSisss WaSShington says if every learner waits
to speak perfectly,
no one would learn
a new language.

Being stubborn
won’t make you fluent.
Practicing will!
The more mistakes you make,
the more you’ll learn not to.

They laugh.

Shame on them!
Challenge them to say something in Vietnamese and laugh right back.
I tell her
Father is at peace.

I tell her
I’d like to plant flowers from Vietnam
in her backyard.

I tell her Tết is coming and luck starts over every new year.

January 19
An Engineer, a Chef, a Vet, and Not a Lawyer

Brother Quang
has started night school to restudy engineering to become what he was meant to be.

Mother smiles.

Vu Lee
refuses to apply to a real college, instead will go to a cooking school in San-fran-cis-co,
where his idol once walked.

Mother sighs,
twists her brows
to no effect.

Brother Khôi
announces he will become a doctor of animals.

Mother starts to say something,
then nods.

Mother has always wanted an engineer, a real doctor, a poet, and a lawyer.
She turns to me.
You love to argue, right?

No I don’t.

She brightens.

I vow to become much more agreeable.
1976: Year of the Dragon

This Tết
there’s no I Ching Teller of Fate, so Mother predicts our year.

Our lives
will twist and twist, intermingling the old and the new until it doesn’t matter which is which.

This Tết
there’s no bánh chưng
in the shape of a square,
made of pork,
glutinous rice,
and mung beans,
wrapped in banana leaves.

Mother makes her own
in the shape of a log,
made of pork,
regular rice,
and black beans,
wrapped in cloth.

Not the same,
but not bad.

As with every Tết
we are expected to smile until it hurts
all three first days
of the year,

wear all new clothes
especially underneath,

not sweep,
not splash water,
not talk back,
not pout.

Mother thinks of everything.

She even asked Brother Quang to bless the house
right after midnight,
so I couldn’t beat him to it by touching my big toe to the carpet before dawn.

Mother has set up an altar
on the highest bookshelf.

The same, forever-young portrait of Father.

I have to look away.

We each hold an incense stick and wait for the gong.

I pray for Father to find warmth in his new home,
Mother to keep smiling more,
Brother Quang to enjoy his studies,
Vu Lee to drive me from and to school,
Brother Khôi to hatch an American chick.

I open my eyes.
The others are still praying.

What could they be asking for?

I think and think
then close my eyes again.
This year I hope

I truly learn to fly-kick,
not to kick anyone
so much as to fly.

January 31
Tết
Dear Reader:

Much of what happened to Hà, the main character in Inside Out & Back Again, also happened to me.

At age ten, I, too, witnessed the end of the Vietnam War and fled to Alabama with my family. I, too, had a father who was missing in action. I also had to learn English and even had my arm hair pulled the first day of school. The fourth graders wanted to make sure I was real, not an image they had seen on TV. So many details in this story were inspired by my own memories.

Aside from remembering facts, I worked hard to capture Hà’s emotional life. What was it like to live where bombs exploded every night yet where sweet snacks popped up at every corner? What was it like to sit on a ship heading toward hope? What was it like to go from knowing you’re smart to feeling dumb all the time?

The emotional aspect is important because of something I noticed in my nieces and nephews. They may know in general where their parents came from, but they can’t really imagine the noises and smells of Vietnam, the daily challenges of starting over in a strange land. I extend this idea to all: How much do we know about those around us?

I hope you enjoy reading about Hà as much as I have enjoyed remembering the pivotal year in my life. I also hope after you finish this book that you sit close to someone you love and implore that person to tell and tell and tell their story.

Thanhha Lai
Acknowledgments

Much thanks to Angie Wojak, Joe Hosking, Sarah Sevier, Tara Weikum, Rosemary Stimola, and of course my family (MÕ, Chí Mai, Anh Anh, Anh Tuấn, Anh Nam, Anh Zũng, Anh Tiền, Anh Sơn, Chí Hướng), with whom I shared April 30, 1975, and weeks on a ship, events that decades later led me to Henri and An.
THANHHA LAI was born in Vietnam and moved to Alabama at the end of the war. She lives in New York City with her family.

Visit www.AuthorTracker.com for exclusive information on your favorite HarperCollins author.
Credits

Jacket art © 2011 by Zdenko Bašić and Manuel Šumberac Jacket design by Ray Shappell
About the Publisher

Australia
HarperCollins Publishers (Australia) Pty. Ltd.
25 Ryde Road (PO Box 321) Pymble, NSW 2073, Australia
http://www.harpercollinsebooks.com.au

Canada
HarperCollins Canada
2 Bloor Street East - 20th Floor
Toronto, ON, M4W, 1A8, Canada http://www.harpercollinsebooks.ca

New Zealand
HarperCollins Publishers (New Zealand) Limited
P.O. Box 1
Auckland, New Zealand
http://www.harpercollinsebooks.co.nz

United Kingdom
HarperCollins Publishers Ltd.
77-85 Fulham Palace Road London, W6 8JB, UK
http://www.harpercollinsebooks.co.uk

United States
HarperCollins Publishers Inc.
10 East 53rd Street
New York, NY 10022
http://www.harpercollinsebooks.com Inside Out & Back Again

THANHHA LAI